Several fires follow lightning storm

Flames raged through the dry vegetation as firefighters battled to contain the blaze.

One of two palm trees in Mahem Street burned after reportedly being struck by lightning.

Dense smoke hung over the blackened veld after the flames swept through the area.

Platinum Bushvelder newspaper | Thabazimbi – A sudden afternoon storm, fierce winds and tinder-dry grass combined to spark a series of dangerous veld fires around Thabazimbi and Marakele National Park on Friday 4 September 2026. Thaba Fire & Rescue received the first call at approximately 15:00, reporting a veld fire that had started at Kwaggasvlakte. Driven by strong winds through tall, dry grass, the flames spread rapidly towards the R510 (the Lephale road). When the wind changed direction, the fire began moving towards Marakele and the surrounding mountains, where another large veld fire was already burning on Aasvoëlkop.

Eight fires sparked inside Marakele

According to Marakele National Park manager Koketso Kotsoe, lightning strikes during Friday afternoon's storm are believed to have ignited approximately eight separate fires inside the park. Once teams had established that the park's animals were safe, their priority shifted to protecting infrastructure and properties bordering the park. Kotsoe confirmed that no large animals were killed in the fires. Strong winds caused fires burning inside and outside the park to move closer together, making the situation extremely difficult to control. Thaba Fire & Rescue, the Waterberg District Fire Team, SANParks personnel and local farmers joined forces to contain the flames and prevent further destruction.

Although rain later helped reduce the intensity of some of the fires, it did not extinguish them all. The fire on Aasvoëlkop remained under constant observation, with teams ready to intervene if necessary. There are no firebreaks on the mountain itself, but several firebreaks within Marakele National Park help slow and contain fires under such conditions.

Red glow lights up the night

By sunset, the scale of the blaze was clearly visible, with an ominous red glow illuminating the mountain against the night sky. After hours of exhausting firefighting, the teams were finally able to return home at approximately 23:30, once the situation had been brought under control. Their rest, however, was short-lived. Shortly after 02:00 on Saturday morning, another emergency call was received. Lightning had reportedly struck two palm trees in Mahem Street in Thabazimbi, setting them alight. Firefighters responded swiftly and had the situation under control by approximately 03:30.

Nuclear power can meet Africa’s and AI’s energy demands

Press release:
NWU | 9 September 2026

- Africa’s AI ambitions will demand vast amounts of reliable electricity. Prof. Bismark Tyobeka believes nuclear power could provide it.
- Nuclear accidents dominate public perception, but the evidence places nuclear among the safest sources of electricity.
- AI needs nuclear power’s round-the-clock electricity, while nuclear plants could use AI to become safer and more efficient.
- Small modular reactors could power African data centres, mines and industrial hubs while supporting local mineral processing.
- Africa’s growth depends on energy security. Without major investment in clean, dependable power, its industrial and digital potential will remain constrained.

Platinum Bushvelder newspaper | SA – Their power and potential are sometimes more than the imagination can fathom. They inspire awe and wonder, fear and trepidation. They are as misunderstood as they are revered. And, as bedfellows, artificial intelligence (AI) and nuclear energy might just be the partnership Africa needs to alleviate its energy deficiencies and realise its energy potential. Or, as nuclear energy expert prof. Bismark Tyobeka, principal and vice-chancellor of the North-West University (NWU), states: “It is a match made in heaven.” Prof. Tyobeka has a point. When one of the defining technological forces of the 20th century converges with the undisputed technological phenomenon of the first 25 years of the 21st, the possibilities are difficult to ignore. Large-scale AI data centres require massive amounts of electricity and, whether now or in the foreseeable future, the continent will have to start building them. The current baseload supplies in most African countries will not suffice. One of the prevailing concerns about nuclear energy is safety. Another is a lack of understanding of how the technology works. At the risk of severely oversimplifying electricity generation, very little has changed during the past century and more. Water is heated sufficiently to create steam, which spins a turbine connected to a generator. In the case of nuclear energy, radioactive material provides the heat. Splitting the atom, it is not. Let’s look at safety. Although nuclear accidents loom large in the public imagination, the historical record is less catastrophic than many assume. In more than 70 years of generating electricity from nuclear power, three accidents have come to define the debate: Three Mile Island in the United States in 1979, Chernobyl in the former Soviet Union in 1986 and Fukushima Daiichi in Japan in 2011. Three Mile Island caused no deaths or injuries, while Fukushima caused no acute radiation injuries or deaths among workers or the public. At Chernobyl, two workers died in the initial explosion and 28 plant employees and firefighters died from acute radiation syndrome during the following weeks. That places the immediate death toll directly attributable to the three accidents at approximately 30. That figure does not tell the entire story. The World Health Organisation has estimated that Chernobyl could ultimately result in as many as 4,000 additional cancer deaths among the most heavily exposed groups. Fukushima’s evacuation also had serious health and social consequences, even though no deaths from acute radiation exposure were recorded. New technologies, prof. Tyobeka argued, could make an already tightly regulated industry safer still. “AI is a game changer,” he said. “It can potentially enhance the safety features of nuclear power-plant designs. It can help us optimise the efficiency of nuclear power plants. It can also help us make rapid decisions across the entire nuclear value chain.” Safety comparisons must also account for how much electricity each source produces. “Deaths per terawatt-hour” measures the estimated number of deaths caused by accidents and air pollution for every terawatt-hour (TWh) of electricity generated.

A widely used comparison places coal at approximately 25 deaths per TWh, oil at 18 and natural gas at three. The corresponding estimates are about 0.04 for wind, 0.03 for nuclear and 0.02 for solar. Put differently, coal is associated with more than 800 times as many deaths per unit of electricity as nuclear power. The precise figures vary between studies, particularly for the safest energy sources, but the conclusion remains consistent: nuclear, wind and solar are vastly safer than fossil fuels. That safety record matters because the demand for dependable electricity is about to intensify. During his public lecture, AI and Nuclear Power: Powering a Smarter, Sustainable Future, prof. Tyobeka acknowledged that both technologies remain controversial. Yet he argued that their convergence could help answer one of the most urgent questions of the digital age: where the immense quantity of reliable, low-carbon electricity required by AI will come from. “These two fields are converging to address one of the world’s most pressing energy challenges: delivering reliable, clean and secure electricity for a sustainable future.” The equation is unforgiving. The more sophisticated AI becomes, the more electricity is required to train models, process information and keep hyperscale data centres operating without interruption. “The need for more electricity therefore immediately accompanies our advances in artificial intelligence,” he said. “We do not only need electricity; we need clean electricity.” Nuclear power offers firm, round-the-clock generation, while small modular reactors (SMRs) and microreactors could bring it closer to the facilities that need it. Unlike conventional plants, their smaller footprint allows them to be deployed incrementally and, potentially, nearer to data centres, mines and industrial hubs. “SMRs and microreactors are particularly well suited because their size allows them to be deployed almost anywhere. They can be built in factories,” said prof. Tyobeka.

The relationship also works in reverse. AI could improve the design and operation of nuclear plants by accelerating reactor-core simulations, detecting anomalies and enabling predictive maintenance. Through digital twins – virtual models fed with information from physical plants – operators could identify deterioration before equipment fails. “You do not replace things only after they have broken; you can predict what should be changed and when.” For Africa, however, the opportunity extends far beyond supplying servers. Reliable electricity could support mining, mineral processing, manufacturing, hydrogen production and desalination while strengthening the digital economy. “Everyone sees growth in Africa, but growth cannot happen without energy security,” he said. “You cannot attract investment where there is no energy security. We are holding Africa back if we do not make major investments in these technologies.” The continent’s critical-mineral wealth adds another dimension. Prof. Tyobeka sees potential for SMRs in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Zambia, South Africa, Namibia and Guinea, where dependable power could allow more minerals to be processed closer to where they are mined. The barriers are considerable. Regulation has to keep pace with new reactor configurations, financing must be mobilised, supply chains strengthened and scarce specialist skills developed. Public trust will be just as important. “People do not trust AI as we sit here. People do not trust nuclear power as we speak. How do you secure buy-in from such suspicious people? Transparency is key.” He called for government, regulators, development-finance institutions, banks, investors, universities and industry to act together. Localisation, he argued, must be part of the bargain so that deployment creates jobs and builds enduring African capability. “Nuclear power can enable Africa’s AI and industrial future. We have seen that the need is real and the opportunity is now.”

Prof. Bismark Tyobeka

Mall rape case postponed AGAIN

Platinum Bushvelder newspaper | Thabazimbi – The case against 54-year-old Lazurus Mabotsane, who is accused of raping a 15-year-old girl at a local mall in Thabazimbi, has been postponed to 30 October 2026 for further investigation. Mabotsane previously appeared in the Thabazimbi Magistrate’s Court, where bail of R500 was granted. The charge stems from an alleged incident on Thursday, 30 April 2026. Limpopo SAPS spokesperson colonel Malesela Ledwaba previously stated that the girl allegedly went to the restroom, where she encountered the accused waiting near the exit. It is alleged that she was forcibly taken into the male restroom, where the assault allegedly occurred. Police investigations continue.

Yet another delay in long-running child assault trial

Platinum Bushvelder newspaper | Thabazimbi – The long-running child assault trial involving Ria Oberholzer, Petrus Oelofse and Jesica Hull has been postponed once again. The matter appeared in court on 27 August 2026 but was postponed to 12 October 2026 for further testimony. The trial began in March 2024 and has since faced numerous postponements. All three accused remain out on bail. They face charges including sexual assault, child neglect, and assault with intent to cause grievous bodily harm.

Preparing your herd for a potentially dry summer

Beefmaster Group press release extracts, 2 Sept '26

Platinum Bushvelder newspaper | SA – With reports indicating a high probability of El Niño impacting South Africa in the coming months, cattle farmers are being encouraged to prepare for the possibility of a drier summer, particularly in South Africa’s summer rainfall regions. According to Jaco Liebenberg, technical manager Feedlot & Farms at Beefmaster Group, there is no reason to panic, but farmers should spend time to assess their resources, plan for different scenarios and be ready to act if conditions deteriorate. “The success of drought management in the cattle industry depends on three things: forward planning, informed decision-making and timely action when it is necessary,” says Liebenberg.

a dry period.” The next step is to establish clear thresholds or trigger points. Rather than waiting for conditions to become critical, farmers should decide in advance what indicators will require action. “Ask yourself: at what point do I need to act?” says Liebenberg. “Having trigger points established beforehand means you are not trying to make a major decision when you are already under pressure.” Finally, farmers should budget and plan for different scenarios, including what they may need to carry the operation through until the next rains arrive. This means engaging early with financial advisers, insurers, banks and agricultural experts and using available information to inform decisions.

Five top tips for cattle farmers

Below are Liebenberg’s top five tips for cattle farmers to help prepare for an uncertain future.

- 1. Act early. Farmers need to make decisions before a crisis hits.
- 2. Keep good records. Financial, animal production and grazing records help farmers understand their break-even point and what it costs to produce a kilogram of beef. Farmers need to know which animals deliver the best return per hectare and make decisions based on the numbers.
- 3. Protect your core breeding herd. Know which animals are essential to your breeding programme so that if you need to sell cattle, you can protect your “star performers”.
- 4. Prioritise grazing management. Ultimately, cattle farmers are farming the land. Healthy soil, protection against erosion and practices such as rotational grazing are fundamental to managing dry conditions and supporting recovery when the rains return.
- 5. Farm with animals adapted to your environment. The right animal needs to be able to convert available grazing into produce efficiently. Breed selection, heat tolerance, fertility and overall condition are important.

“Being like the ants, not the grasshopper, in the classic children’s fable about the power of preparation, can put farmers in a stronger position to navigate uncertainty, no matter what the weather brings,” concludes Liebenberg.

Do you believe in luck?

Some people believe success comes from being in the right place at the right time, while others credit hard work, faith and wise choices. Do you think luck plays a role in life, or do we create our own opportunities? Yes or no?
